Bring your favourite design to the conversation

A visualiser is a great way to narrow down what you like. It helps you see the relationship between the garage door and your home's façade, roof, windows and driveway. A measured consultation then checks the details that an image can't establish.

Note the door design, profile and colour you liked. If you have a saved image or screenshot, keep it handy to discuss with your consultant. Tell the team about your selection when you enquire; don't assume your visualiser choices have been received simply because you viewed them online.

From an idea to a door that fits

Your visualiser helps you explore	Your consultation helps confirm
How a garage-door design looks alongside your home.	The door type and construction suited to the opening, available headroom, side space and ceiling area.
A preferred panel profile, colour or finish.	Whether that combination is available for the selected model and size, and how the physical sample looks in your light.
The overall style you want to achieve.	The exact door and opener models, compatible accessories and included features.
A starting point for your project.	Measured dimensions, installation requirements, itemised price, lead time and applicable warranty.

A visualiser image is an indication of appearance, not a measured specification, fixed price or confirmation that every shown combination can be supplied for your opening. We'll work through those details before you commit to an order.

What happens after you enquire?

We discuss your project. Tell us where you are, whether you're building or replacing, and what you liked in the visualiser. We'll help arrange the next step with our dealer network.

You compare the real options. Your local team can discuss profiles, colours and finish samples, then assess the opening and installation. Ask whether a B&D To You mobile-showroom visit is available in your area; showroom and appointment options vary by location.

Your dealer confirms the specification and quote. Review the door, finish, opener, accessories and installation inclusions together. The dealer supplies and installs your door, with the manufacturing order and installation arrangements coordinated after you confirm your selection and accept the quote.

Submitting an enquiry starts the conversation. It does not place a door order or confirm an appointment time. Your local team will confirm availability, timing and the arrangements with you.

Check the finish in person

Colours can look different on different screens and in different light. We recommend viewing a physical sample before making your final selection, particularly when coordinating with existing exterior materials.

Timber-look and natural-look finishes describe the appearance; they do not mean the door is made from solid timber, stone or concrete. Finish, profile, size and window options vary across our range. Your dealer will confirm the available combination and the exact finish name for your order.

Think about how you’ll use the garage

The look is only part of the decision. Let us know whether the garage is your main entry, whether living spaces sit nearby and what you would like to improve about the current door.

Access and automation: discuss the opener, remotes, keypad or compatible smartphone-control options you want.

Safety and security: ask which locks and safety features are standard, which are optional and what equipment is required for your chosen controls.

Power outages: discuss compatible backup-power options and how you will access the garage if there is no separate pedestrian entrance.

Installation: confirm removal of an existing door, access to the opening and any electrical or building work excluded from the quote.

Site requirements: provide any assessed wind or bushfire requirements so the door configuration can be checked against your project.

What should be in the quote?

Ask for the actual door model, dimensions, profile and finish; the opener model and accessories; installation and removal work; price and payment terms; expected timing; and applicable warranty. A familiar product name alone doesn’t tell you everything included in a package.

Our measure-and-quote guide explains the door and opener options to compare. Our price guide can help you understand the factors that affect cost before you receive your own measured quote.
