You're in the right place. Welcome to our inspiration gallery. Here you'll find dozens of unique and striking garage door aesthetics to inspire your next project. Whether you're building new or renovating an existing structure, your garage door can account for up to 60% of your homes façade, so it's important that you make the right choice when designing your new B&D; garage door. Where do you want to start? Now that you know what kind of garage door you want, it's time to think about automating it. The garage door opener is the motor that sits on either the ceiling (sectional doors) or the side of the drum (roller doors) and make the garage automatically lift and lower with the touch of a button. Automation has come along way over the decades, and we would know, B&D; were the first garage door supplier in Australia to automate a garage door way back in 1975. These days you don't even need a remote to open your garage door, you can just use the sound of your voice through the B&D; app! Now that is smart. But garage door openers don't just make it easy to come and go, they also keep your garage secure with things like automatic backdrive which forces the garage back down when it feels someone trying to lift it, or our secure remote control technology that criminals can't enter or exit using illegal (but easily attainable) smartphone applications. Roller Door Openers B&D; roller door openers are attached to the drum on the side of the roller door and allow it to effortlessly lift and lower day after day, week after week. Roller Door Openers Roller Door Openers Roller Door Openers Sectional Door Openers Sectional door openers sit on the roof of the garage and pull the garage up and along the roof with the click of a button.
