But like any other part of your home, it doesn't last for ever. Here are five signs that it might be time to consider replacing your roller door

1. Decline in function If your roller door is operating slower than usual or making unusual noises, it may be time to consult a professional to determine whether a replacement is needed. While maintenance can fix some issues, persistent problems with its operation with a roller door can suggest a replacement is needed
2. Visible damage or deterioration Over time, wear and tear can take a toll on your roller door. Look out for signs of rusk, dents or warping, which can impact the doors performance and appearance. If your door is looking worse for wear, find a B&D; dealer near you , and discuss replacement options.
3. Increased need for safety and security Older roller doors don't offer the same level of security as new modern ones. At B&D; safety and security is a priority and we are passionate about helping you protect the things that matter most. We have a range of options and upgrades specifically for roller doors to enhance both safety and security in your home.
4. Frequent breakdowns and services At B&D;, we recommend a regular service every two years to help keep your roller door functioning at its best throughout its life. However, like all moving things, parts do break down from time to time. If you have had to contact a garage door technician several times in the past year due to the performance of your roller door, it may be a sign to consider investing in a new one. To determine the best course of action, contact a B&D; garage door professional. Looking for more information?
