Featuring plenty of handy information on door types, styles and safety features, this garage door buying guide is ideal for new homeowners or anyone looking to upgrade their current door. Explore our range Explore our range Explore our range Types of garage doors All of our B&D; garage doors are Australian-made and available in two types: roller doors and sectional doors. Roller garage doors Sectional garage doors Tilt doors Roller garage doors provide a practical and economical option for securing garages, laneways, and sheds. These doors are designed to maximise space efficiency, allowing you to use the ceiling area for lighting or additional storage. They operate by rolling upwards in a tight coil at the top of the door frame, enabling you to park your car close to the door, saving space in the driveway. These doors are available both with and without an automated opening system. Roller garage doors are built with a robust key lock system to enhance security and prevent unauthorised access. They can also be built to resist strong winds, making them suitable for regions frequently affected by cyclones. Sectional garage doors consist of multiple interconnected panels, giving the appearance of a single, solid door. They are customisable to fit various shapes and sizes of garage openings. In contrast to roller doors, sectional doors move along metal tracks fixed to the ceiling during their opening and closing cycle. Available in different styles and colours, these doors are a favourite choice for residential properties due to their contemporary look, durability, and practicality. With sectional garage doors, the necessity of manual operation and physical unlocking is a thing of the past. These doors are usually bought with an automatic opener for enhanced security. Most garage doors lack a lock, but B&D;'s automatic locking systems eliminate the need for manual locks, ensuring that access is limited to those with a remote. Tilt doors are less frequently used in garages due to their associated safety and security concerns, which is why B&D; don't produce or install them. These doors consist of a single, heavy piece with exposed springs on both sides, rather than being made of hinged panels. The weight of the door places significant stress on the springs and balancing mechanisms during operation. Over time, worn-out springs can break, causing the door to shut suddenly and unexpectedly, posing a risk to people, pets, and vehicles nearby.
